POLICE PROTECTION

Residents of outlying residential districts have been asking for more complete police protection, and complain that they are the victims of petty thieving and the hands of organized gangs of plunderers.

It is not a questioning the right of people living in every part of the city to adequate police protection; not only the kind of protection that is secured when law-breakers are caught, but the more effective kind which comes through the prevention of law-breaking.

The difficulty in the way of giving that protection everywhere is, of course, the lack of men, it is simply not possible financially that every street in the city should be made a beat on which policemen would keep watch even during the night.

The something will have to be done on a mile radius area in outlying sections that have been made. Considering the size of the force and the area of the city, it is remarkable that there has been so little complaint about lawlessness in the far-outlying residential areas.

Perhaps the situation can be met by following the line along which the fire brigade has been developed. We need to have fire fire stations all over the city, with a company of men and hose-drawn apparatus in each of them. Now we have only a few hells, equipped with up-to-date motor-driven apparatus. The fire is better protected against fire than it ever was.

Maybe the alternative to more policemen in more motorized and automobile-and-horse for sections where these cannot operate.

CANADIANS FOR CANADA

The Government of Quebec, it is acknowledged, will in future give greater attention to means to induce the young people of that province to stay in Canada, and to direct migration to the West instead of to the United States. This is a very laudable and practical sense which the Governments of other provinces would do well to copy. Canada is a free country, of course, and any one who wants to go out of the country is at liberty to do so. But the weight of governmental influence should be put behind an aggressive and persistent effort to show young Canadians that their own country is big enough and rich enough to provide scope for their talents, however large, and to pay them rich rewards for the application of their industry and enterprise to the development of its resources.

It is claimed that Quebec has sent three millions of its sons and daughters to live in the United States. Ontario must have sent about as much to enrich the citizenship of the Republic. The maritime provinces have been lured to two or three generations by the industrial centres of New England. All told there must be at least a million of our sons and their descendants in the United States as there are in Canada. And while we are expatriating our sons we are expatriating our sons' sons. Sons come and settle our vacant lands, work our mines, cut our timber, operate our railways and gather the prizes which might have gone to our sons and sons-in-law. It is time for positive action all along the line to make an end of this costly emigration for Canada lacks at both ends of the deal. However desiring the immigrant to contract for his own education, it is quite well as the native-born. And the longer the emigration continues the more Canadian Canada becomes.

BRITAIN'S EXISTENCE AT STAKE

The naval conference at Geneva dead-ended on the question of cruisers, how many and of what tonnage. The United States proposed 400,000 tons as the aggregate cruiser tonnage which shall be maintained by Great Britain and which the British representative do not expect to figure in itself. But they hold that Britain should have cruisers as powerful as those of any other country, and that it needs more cruisers than any other country. Britain and the United States should have approximately the same number of cruisers of the same size. The facts do not in itself the opposition of the United States to the British proposal, open possessions to protect, and not one single ocean trade route that is vital to the existence. Great Britain is dependent for its commerce on the sea, and it is duty bound to also keep open the routes by which a score of colonies and dependencies must ship their products abroad. The United States would simply not know what to do with as many cruisers as Britain would actually require to place its vital trade channels in line. And Japan is substantially the same position.

The United States and Japan can look upon the proposal to reduce cruisers in number or tonnage from the standpoint of an ally, and regard it as a happy expedient to save money. Great Britain is bound to look upon the proposal in the light of the fact that it stands in an actively direct position. Neither of the other two would be mortally wounded if its sea trade were shut off suddenly by an enemy. Britain would starve in a matter of months if its sea routes were closed by a hostile force. Britain has more to lose than any other country. The United States or Japan, but it does not have money at the price of putting its existence at the mercy of an enemy. And that is what the proposal amounts to: that Britain must place its sea routes with cruisers too small to fight or the few to get within range of hostile commerce destroyers.

Another of the well-known old-timers of the city has passed on. Mr. J. H. Garvey was for many years a partner in one of the largest mercantile establishments in the town, and later the city. He served the community with credit on the separate school board, the exhibition association, the board of trade, and the town council.

Bird Nests

By EDGAR A. GUEST

What a wonder world it is
For a little girl of five
At the close time of the year
And so good to be alive
With the possibility to explore
Seeking bird nests near and far.
And a dash of fortune
Who can show her where they are!

Every evening after tea
We go wandering about
To the nests which we have found
Where the little birds are out.
And we take them in hand
To a certain level crest
Where desperately we stand
At a killer's curious nest.

And a mad-as-lark we know
With five babies in a row
What a wonder world it is
And so good to be alive
She can surely say for tea
How she looks her pudding through
With so much she wants to do
And so much she wants to do.

So we hurry out of doors
And the children's eyes are out
To the mother's ladder
And the children's eyes are out
And we talk of God Who made
All the birds and the flowers
And we whisper half afraid
"What a wonder world it is."

Marrying the Typist

By DR. FRANK CRANE

A newspaper announcement the other day eloquently stated that a third Englishman had married his secretary.

What of it?

Third Englishman has been marrying out of the periodical frequency of late years and many of the marriages have turned out to be happy unions with no regrets on either side.

The average newspaper publisher about as much intelligence, charm and grace as the average office employee, because of her training, is a bit better off than the average man.

She is just as liable to have a good figure and a dash of wit as her male fellows, and she has had the advantage of wealth and social position.

Furthermore, she is just as likely to have been reared in a home where she has had the best of both worlds. She has had the best of both worlds. She has had the best of both worlds. She has had the best of both worlds.

Generally speaking, it is the women who have false standards and the men who have false standards. The average newspaper publisher about as much intelligence, charm and grace as the average office employee, because of her training, is a bit better off than the average man.

She is just as liable to have a good figure and a dash of wit as her male fellows, and she has had the advantage of wealth and social position.

Furthermore, she is just as likely to have been reared in a home where she has had the best of both worlds. She has had the best of both worlds. She has had the best of both worlds. She has had the best of both worlds.

Health and Diet Advice

By DR. FRANK MCCOY

Diet Specialist and Author of "The Fast Way to Health"

Questions on Health and Diet answered by Dr. McCoy, when addressed in care of The Edmonton Bulletin.

CURERS ARE CONVINCING

Much to being written about the need for preventive disease through diet in dietetic personal hygiene, etc. Almost every chairman who introduces me at my lectures, tells the audience that I am going to teach them how to prevent disease. But I have found from long experience on the lecture platform and in my private practice that people are very little interested in the subject of disease prevention, but always pick up their ears when told how they can be cured.

I find that those who have not had the experience of pain or discomfort, or if they have not been told by a physician that they have some definite disease, are only slightly interested and seldom do anything to prevent their trouble from becoming chronic.

I always allow at each lecture for members of the audience to ask me questions. During a recent lecture, I talked to over a half million people and never once did anyone who was well ask me a question on how to continue to keep good health. Questions were asked on all subjects from falling hair to fallen arches, but they were always queries on how to cure their troubles, rather than how to prevent them.

It is true that many of the people who have been told by a physician that they have some definite disease, are only slightly interested and seldom do anything to prevent their trouble from becoming chronic.

I always allow at each lecture for members of the audience to ask me questions. During a recent lecture, I talked to over a half million people and never once did anyone who was well ask me a question on how to continue to keep good health. Questions were asked on all subjects from falling hair to fallen arches, but they were always queries on how to cure their troubles, rather than how to prevent them.

It is true that many of the people who have been told by a physician that they have some definite disease, are only slightly interested and seldom do anything to prevent their trouble from becoming chronic.

Hamilton Spectator: Dr. Davey wants the curfew rung every night at 9 o'clock, to warn young people off the streets and into their beds every twenty years ago, he reminds us it used to be the good old custom, but why not now? But a lot has happened in the last twenty years, too. The ringing of a bell wouldn't mean a thing in the inauspicious life of our modern young generation.

THE "DEBUNKER"
Scientific American: Now you will not find the word in the dictionary—no, it is not of recent origin. A "debunker" is a creature who sets out to prove to you that some great historical achievement, which because of his notoriety of character and undoubted achievement, has been mentioned upon the heights of undying fame, is not so much of a thing as it is made out to be. Just such a man as any John Jones or Billy Smith might be, but the "debunker" will tell you that George Washington was a liar, that Napoleon was a drunkard, and that the world was not so much of a thing as it is made out to be. Just such a man as any John Jones or Billy Smith might be, but the "debunker" will tell you that George Washington was a liar, that Napoleon was a drunkard, and that the world was not so much of a thing as it is made out to be.

What are the motives which prompt a man to start "debunking"? They may be many and varied, but to us they appear to be mainly two, and both of them are very undesirable. The first is a desire for notoriety, and the second is a desire for a living. The "debunker" knows that he will draw a good deal of attention to himself, and that he will be able to make a good deal of money out of it. He is a creature who is not to be trusted.

WHY CANADA IS ACTING ON OWN AT WASHINGTON

CHICAGO, July 8.—After nearly three weeks of lectures and round tables, the Institute of the University of Chicago, under the auspices of the American Historical Association, has today completed its session. Delegates from nearly every point of the Empire, including the United States and Canada, have participated.

Dr. D. C. Miller, editor of the Manitoba Free, presented Canada's concluding lecture. He traced the history of the constitutional development of that country, and stressed Australia's part in the development of that country, with the empire in all foreign affairs. He said that the weight of Great Britain was still immeasurably greater than that of all the dominions put together. Its protection as any dominion withdraws it self from association with the empire. It diminishes the influence it may exert in world politics or in its own immediate and perhaps vital affairs.

Australia, he continued, was not likely to follow Canada's example and establish separate dominion relations with the United States. Canada and the United States had so many problems in common and the position of the dominion was different from Australia's. That country, he pointed out, was heretofore of British diplomatic machinery throughout the world.

In closing Sir Wm. said: "Foreign relations which present themselves to Canada as matters of every-day business with the United States have presented themselves to Australia as something new but vital becoming matters of foreign relations only if the right to treat them as matters of domestic policy was challenged."

From this standpoint it is the major issue, the possible aggression that colors our view of foreign relations. In such matters the concern of Australia is not the barren right to enter into separate relations with foreign powers, but an assurance that the whole weight of the empire is on her side whether the matter arise within or without the Empire of Nations.

DAN AND JIMMY

They were glad to meet each other, were Governor Dan Moody, of Texas (left), and Mayor James Walker, of New York city. Moody headed a delegation of Texas visiting New York. Behind them is a group of Texas visitors, including the late former U. S. commissioner of Indian Affairs, another of the Texas crowd.

MORE ABOUT RELICS FOUND

The bodies and the bones they can be regarded with little doubt as having been left by the expedition. (Regarding the pieces of cloth, the Admiralty report stated: "Three pieces, found at Starvation Cove, are exactly similar in texture and in the staining caused by weathering, to the specimens of native cloth from the Erebus and Terror found by McClintock.")

Skull Also Discovered

The collection of other articles, the report says, is not quite so definite. A human skull discovered at Starvation Cove, 125 miles across Simpson Strait from Adams Island, was examined by the Dominion department of health. Others, and the conclusion was arrived at that it was the skull of a young man of European type, possibly an Englishman. The conclusion was concurred in by the department of mines.

One of the facts that the Franklin ships were abandoned near the coast of the Gulf of Boothia, in the Arctic Ocean, and the whole party died from exposure and starvation there is every probability that the skull was that of one of the surviving members of the expedition, as the spot where it was found would have been traversed by the party en route to reach Back River, its objective.

Preserved in Museum

The articles examined by the A.D. have been preserved in the National Museum at Greenwich where they are to be on exhibition with other relics of the expedition. The skull has been deposited in the museum of the North West Territories and Yukon Branch of the Interior Department at Ottawa.

Sir John Franklin was born at Spauldy, England in 1796. He served in the Arctic of Copenhagen in 1810 and on his return to England joined the Arctic expedition of 1818-19. He explored Arctic and Alaskan regions for which service he received the honor of knighthood.

Left Alone in 1845

On May 15, 1845 he sailed in the Erebus and Terror in an attempt to reach the North Pole. The expedition was wrecked on Lancaster Sound and Herby Strait. The ships were last seen July 26, 1845 in Herby Bay. An expedition was sent out in search of the ships and his party and until 1877 various groups were sent out from England and the United States all with the object of finding traces of Franklin, but without success.

An expedition led by McClintock in 1858 eventually found traces with a record of the abandonment of the Erebus and Terror and of the death of Sir John Franklin on June 11, 1847. It was proved that Franklin succeeded in demonstrating the existence of the north west passage.

U.S. Railways Plan to Put on Aerial Service

CEAR POINT, O., July 8.—Five large railway companies are considering supplementing their rail passenger service with air passenger service. Wm. P. Macfarlane, Jr., assistant secretary of commerce for aviation, declared here Thursday night, Macfarlane, secretary of the American Air Association, is here to address the Ohio Air Association, which is in annual convention. Some of the lines have actually completed arrangements for such service, but it has little doubt that what marked progress in this direction has been made within a year, he said.

If the railroads do establish air lines to supplement their rail service, they will probably do so in conjunction with the air transport companies, merely taking care of selling of tickets, necessary business and administrative work, charging the transport companies a percentage for their service.

Six Arrests Follow One Hour Fur Protest Strike

NEW YORK, July 8.—A disturbance that centered around Ben Gold, leader of the left wing of the Fur Workers union, and which resulted in six arrests, was the only disorder that marked the one-hour protest strike called by New York workers today in support of the American Fur Workers' strike.

MYSTERY DEATH AT RESTON, MAN.

RESTON, Man., July 8.—Town and provincial police officers are searching the countryside for a "mysterious stranger" following the death in hospital here Thursday of Hugh Stabler, a 23-year-old farm hand.

With his jaw broken in several places and a fracture at the base of the skull, Stabler was found on a road near Reston, Man., 15 miles northwest of here, at midnight Wednesday. The body was brought to hospital here, where he died.

Stabler, who came to Canada from Germany about a year ago, with his young wife, was returning to his employer's farm from town. The car he was driving became stuck in a ditch, and he sought the assistance of a young man walking along the road. Attempts to free the car were unsuccessful. That was the last seen of Stabler until he was found on the road.

No trace of the stranger has been found. Police expect full day.
